About sections. In section, we will clarify and reinforce what you have learned in lecture by answering your questions and covering applications of the week’s material. The applications will be similar to questions posed on problem sets and exams. Often, we will solve the Learning-by-Doing exercises provided in the text, so please bring your textbook to section. You may choose to attend any section time-slot that you prefer.

If there are any hand-outs provided during section, they will be posted to the Wiley-PLUS site.

Sections are designed to be interactive and friendly. Please ask questions that you have and respond to the ones that we pose to the class. Additionally, if you have any suggestions for making the sections more useful or concerns that you would like us to address, do let us know. Both of us are looking to provide the best learning experience for you possible, making feedback highly appreciated.

E-mail. We will respond to most e-mails within 24 hours and to all within 48 hours. If you have a long question or one that requires a detailed response, please ask us in office hours or after section.

Essays. Problem sets will consist of two parts, both of which will be answered online: a multiple-choice section and an essay. Your essay should be concise, clear, and make use of economic principles accurately.

Essays will be graded on a scale from 1–5, taking both clarity of thought and the appropriate application of economic concepts into consideration. Regrades must be requested in person during the office hours of the GSI that graded the assignment. You must have a hard copy of your response with you. Regrades can result in a higher or a lower score for your submission.
